Yvonne Crespo LaPrime, daughter of Sidney J. Crespo, a faculty member of New Orleans Public School System from 1910 to 1936, and Marie J. Nixon, was born in New Orleans on February 5, 1912. Educated primarily in local public schools, she received a B. Mus. from Newcomb College (1932) an M.A. from Tulane University (1942) and Orleans Parish School Board teacher certification from Normal School (1933). Employed by OPSB for thirty-nine years, she taught at A.D. Crossman and Andrew Jackson Elementary Schools, John McDonogh High School. In 1944 she received a new classification as ambulatory teacher of Music (title later changed to music consultant) and worked with elementary and high school teachers in the public school system. She was acting supervisor of music in 1958, 1963 and 1968 and retired in 1970. Additionally she served as education instructor at Tulane University.

She married Bernard G. LaPrime in 1936 and was one of four teachers who challenged OPSB's policy on married women teachers.
